"Reliques of Ancient English Poetry," and Charles W. Rodman, jr., read from "Dowden's" criticism of Richard III, with an explanatory dissertation Dr. Charles H. Miller, N. A., read a paper, entitled "An American Play, by William Shakespeare," wherein he made the claim that "The Tempest" really was an artistic tribute to Columbus, to Queen Isabella and to America, as found expressed by Miranda in the words: "O, brave New World!" This was clear, he said, not only by mention in the play of the "Bermoothes," the Patagonian god 'Setebos," the game of chess between Ferdinand and Miranda and between Ferdinand and Isabelia, but also in the likeness of Columbus to "Prospero," both being "magicianlike navigators and cosmographers."; Each, he went on, was the victim of a usurper, and pretender; Prospevo of an Antonia, and Christopher Columbus of an Americus Veepucius. He ended with the words: "If ever mortal had earned the name of 'Prospero' it was Columbo!"

The entertainment was well attended and most enjoyable throughout. The club continues its meetings through the summer season, and has during the last year established a town library under the auspices of the University of the State of New-York.

enabled to examine much better than before the body by means of the fluorescent screen. Presently the vertebral column can be seen quite clearly, even in the lower part of the body. I have also clearly noted the outlines of the hip banes. Looking in the region of the heart, I have been able to locate it unmistakably. The background appeared much brighter, and this difference in the intensity of the shadow and surroundings has surprised me. The ribs I could now see on a number of occasions quite distinctly, as well as the shoulder bones. Of course, there is no difficulty whatever in observing the bones of all the limbs.

This latter discovery, he thinks, is capable of extensive practical application.

THE 12TH REGIMENT'S BUSY NIGHT.

A DINNER AND REVIEW-PRESENTATION OF COLORS AND DECORATIONS. The 19th Regiment celebrated several anniversaries yesterday. It was reviewed by its old war colonel and received a new stand of colors, while most of its members received decorations which they had earned at the rifle ranges. The The Old Guard of the 12th had its forty-ninth annual dinner at the Hotel Savoy, and at the same time celebrated the anniversary of the departure of the regiment for the seat of war in 1861. Major-General Butterfield, who commanded the regiment at that time, presided, and near him sat Colonel Heman Dowd, Colonel William Seward, Colonel George Moore Smith, Colonel R. H. Savage, U. S. A.; Colonel H. A. Gildersleeve, Colonel Henry W. Ryder, General Charles A. Carleton, Captain Bleecker S. Barnard, John Downey, Colonel Charles E. Sprague, Captain William H. Schwalbe, Colonel Edward M. L. Ehlers, General William G. Ward, Colonel S. V. R. Cruger, Colonel John Ward, Colonel Edward Gilon, Major Charles S. Burns, Captain Charles A. Smylle, Captain Thomas Denny, jr., Touro Robertson and Lieutenant Peter Conlin.

At the four long tables which stood at right decorated ballroom sat about one hundred grizzled soldiers, who, while they are the anniversary dinner and listened to the music reminiscent of slavery days, told stories of the time when they marched to the front in '61.

On account of the review which was arranged to take place at the armory last night, the dinner had to be finished after the last number on the menu had been reached, and before any speeches could be made. The whole party then went to the armory, at Sixty-second-st. and Columbus-ave. Long before the reviewing officer and his party reached the armory every available bit of room in the great building was occupied by friends of the

the great building was occupied by friends of the command who were anxious to see the parade, and no one who waited patiently for the "boys" to make their appearance seemed to be sorry, for the regiment was seen at its best. There were twelve commands of sixteen files. Every man on the floor was a marksman, the non-marksmen havings been detailed for guard duty. The regiment was formed in line of parade, and then the ceremony of presenting the new colors was performed, the Colonel handing the Stars and Stripes to Color-Sergeant Bajart and the State flag to Colorel Smith and Colonel Savage.

After a short parade the marksman's badges were distributed. Fourteen members received the expert decoration, forty-one received the sharpshooter's badge, and 536 received the marksman's medal. After the regiment was dismissed the floor was cleared for dancing, and then the members of the Old Guard found their way back to the Hotel Savoy, where the stories connected with crossing Long Bridge were toid again, and, surrounded by luxury and comfort, the veterans recalled the days when they ate hardtack in Virginia.

The speakers and toasts included the following: Colonel Dowd, "The Day We Celebrate"; Colonel George Bliss, "War Times"; General Carleton, "The Veteran"; Colonel Ehlers, "Our Work in Ishi"; Colonel Savage, "The Flag"; Colonel Seward, "The National Guard"; Major Burns, "The Boys."
